

Energy Efficiency Workshop for New & Existing Homes

A Community Workshop by Indigenous Building Experts through the Train-the-Trainer Program

Building Expertise Across Communities

The Fraser Basin Council is co-delivering a Train-the-Trainer program with Indigenous housing expert Richard Hall of Nuxalk Nation. This work is in partnership with the Aboriginal Housing Management Association (AHMA) and the British Columbia Institute of Technology (BCIT).

The program helps build skills and knowledge in energy-efficient building construction within Indigenous communities in two ways.

First, a peer group of eight Indigenous building experts in four regions of BC (Northern BC, Central Coast, Southern BC and the BC Interior) complete training on housing energy efficiency through the Train the Trainer program.

Second, these Indigenous building experts deliver a number of introductory workshops about energy efficiency solutions and practices, for both new construction and existing homes, to communities in their regions.

Schedule Your Workshop!

Your community is eligible for a workshop on home energy efficiency.

Workshop Dates: A limited number of workshops will be scheduled (maximum of one per community) between June and September, 2022.

Time: Each workshop is a half-day (2-3 hours).

Financial Support: Train-the-Trainer is part of the First Nations Home EnergySave Program, administered by the Fraser Basin Council. Workshops are available at no cost to communities. The program can also provide financial support of up to $1000 to assist with related costs, such as facility rental, catering or honoraria.

Workshop Model: The workshop is a group mentoring/training session with information and dialogue on energy efficiency best practices.

Who Will Want to Attend: The workshop will interest community staff members, including housing staff, asset managers and maintenance crews – everyone who wants to learn more about improving energy efficiency in homes.

When you're making a home energy efficient,
you're making it a
